MAX YOUR TAX

If your business has an aggregated annual turnover of less than $10 million, you may be able to use the instant asset write-off \(IAWO\) to immediately deduct the business portion of the cost of eligible assets which cost less than $20,000.

Eligible assets must have been first used or installed ready for use for a taxable purpose between 1 July 2025 and 30 June 2026. The $20,000 limit applies on a per asset basis, so you can instantly write-off multiple assets.

If an eligible small business has previously claimed a deduction for an asset's cost under the simplified depreciation rules in an earlier income year, they can also immediately deduct the first improvement cost for that asset. This applies as long as the improvement cost was incurred between 1 July 2025 and 30 June 2026 and is less than the $20,000 limit.

The IAWO can be used for both new and second-hand assets; some exclusions and limits apply. It is only available to eligible small businesses that use the simplified depreciation rules.

Assets costing $20,000 or more can continue to be placed into the general small business pool and depreciated at 15% in the first income year and 30% each following income year.

The usual rules for claiming deductions still apply, and you must have records to prove your claim.

Remember, it's important to keep good records to help you or your tax professional work out your claim and be able to show us if required.

INDUSTRY LEADING TECHNOLOGY

Yamaha utility SSVs run our proven Ultramatic® automatic transmission system. This system of variable sheaves maintains belt tension to result in one of the most durable automatic CVT systems available. AG BIKE: AN AUSSIE ICON

Yamaha was the first motorcycle manufacturer to recognise a need to produce a motorcycle specifically designed for Australian farmers' needs.

So a group of Yamaha Motor Corporation engineers were sent to Queensland in the early 1970s to design the first official AG bike. After speaking to the farmers and local Yamaha dealer, the design team discovered a need for a motorcycle that could be used to muster cattle, undertake fence control and check on water holes across a range of countryside ranging from hard rock to sandy creek beds.

They came up with the AG100 which was launched in 1973 and based on the LT1 two-stroke. Additions included high mudguards with mudflaps, fully enclosed chain, bash plate, rear and front carriers, beefed up suspension and a set of steel hand guards to prevent fingers being crushed by trees and to keep levers intact in the event of the bike being dropped. The rear rack was large, and a comprehensive external toolbox was fitted underneath.

But what was really special about the first AG bike was its gearbox that had neutral at the bottom, making selection easy. YMC engineers discovered that farmers worked a lot of gates and so often needed to find neutral to keep the bike running when pulled up next to a gate. The new gearbox instantly became one of the most popular features on the new bike. Two years after its successful launch, Yamaha introduced a DT175-based version called AG175.

THE NEW GEARBOX THAT HAD NEUTRAL AT THE BOTTOM, INSTANTLY BECAME ONE OF THE MOST POPULAR FEATURES ON THE NEW BIKE.

This model featured a wide, flat top ridged fuel tank designed to carry sheep, a foam air filter, engine guards and side stand on each side of the bike so it can be easily parked on any slope.

These two models were so successful that the Yamaha term 'AG', used for these models is still the generic term for farm bikes. Soon they were imported to New Zealand, and later to the Middle East and Africa.

With a need to keep ahead of competitors who finally started to enter the AG market, Yamaha launched the AG200L in 1984.

This was a ground up, purpose built four-stroke farm bike sporting all the features that made the two-strokes popular with the added bonus of monoshock suspension and a plush single seat.

More recently, Yamaha has released the AG125 which continues to offer the trouble-free features that farmers demand such as reliable four-stroke power, twin racks, a fully enclosed chain, sealed drum brakes and electric start.

Australian farmers continue to see the attraction of simple, reliable, economical transport to convey themselves huge distances over inhospitable terrain.
